The Caribbean remains one of the most popular places to vacation. Not only are you almost guaranteed great weather, but there are seemingly endless islands to choose from. From St. Kitts and St. Lucia to Cuba, Puerto Rico and Barbados, there's a Caribbean destination to suit any mood and type of traveller. To help you make your choice, here are five islands worth considering for your next sun and sand vacation.

If you're seeking diversity: St. Vincent and the Grenadines

The 32-island chain of St. Vincent and the Grenadines (SVG) is a haven for anyone who loves the Caribbean. Although only eight of the islands are inhabited, that still means you're getting eight ways to escape the cold depending on what type of vacation you're after. That's the beauty of SVG: the diversity makes it the perfect place to island hop for a few days—or simply choose one spot to base yourself for a week of total relaxation. Whether you want to hike a volcano on St. Vincent (La Soufrière), snorkel with a sea turtle in the Tobago Cays, bask in the sun on laid back Bequia, or indulge in a little eco-friendly luxury on the private island resort of Palm Island, options are plentiful and you won't be disappointed by what you chose.
